DESCRIPTION ET EQUIPEMENTS

Jeep Ford MUTT M151 A2 1965, The Vietnam Jeep In 1950, during the Cold War in Asia, the American military needed to improve their M38 Jeep. The military asked for a new vehicle that would be lighter, more powerful and more comfortable, and that could also be parachuted. Tests were carried out in a hurry, and were all very favorable: the M151 seemed lower and even sleeker, if we can use that term for a military vehicle. 1969 saw the appearance of the Ford-produced 151 A2, which was produced for one year before being handed over to AM General, which continued production until 1982. The new models were reinforced by two central spars, and the monocoque body benefited from suspensions that were far less primitive than the inflexible leaf springs of its predecessor. At the front, wishbones (...)
